

STAKEOUT – WHAT'S THAT?

Stakeout is the most visible, the most expensive and the most famous part of a private activity. It is the main method used by investigators to bring evidence in support of their clients.

Stakeout or operative tracking is the most requested service of a firm of private detectives. However, there are few things that customers know about spying.

The choice to use the stakeout is quite wide and is used generally when:

- A partner of the couple is supposedly unfaithful;
- Customers will check the entourage and habits of their children;
- Checking and tracking of customer's employees;
- The client wants to know if a business partner deserves to be included in a new project or to check the loyalty or moral probity of old business partners.

In general stakeout is offering customers the clearest evidence on the subject of the investigation. Following operations stakeout, detectives obtained and made available to their customers a series of photos and videos. These are summarized in comprehensive and informative reports and can be sustained in court by detectives have obtained.

The quality of a stakeout depends on the one hand the professionalism and stakeout number of teams involved and, on the other hand the technique used in field operations.

The number of private investigators who are required to do a stakeout professional varies from case to case. We can say that a minimum of two detectives is absolutely necessary even in the slightest stakeout in which the subject is moving with a car and the number may increase to ten detectives in special cases.